Social Security Information For Novices Issued

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, through the Social Security administration, recently issued some comprehensive advice on social security for youngsters and students who are taking jobs for the first time.

Their report states that students and other young people taking jobs for the first time should obtain a social security number. Most jobs in commerce and industry are covered by the Social Security Act, and employers are required to make reports to the government every three months. These reports must show not only the name of each worker and the amount of his wages, but also his social security number.

From these quarterly reports the Social Security Administration keeps an individual account of the wages for each worker during his lifetime. All future insurance benefit payments are based on the amount of earnings credited to the individual account.

The question is often asked: "Am I old enough to have a social security number?" There is no age limit for coverage under this law. However, a child working for his own parent, who is sole owner of a business, cannot receive social security credit before age 21.

The young worker should know that his earnings, when properly credited to his social security account, provide survivors insurance to his family in the event of his untimely death. In addition, these earnings by younger workers add to the value of their future retirement benefits. Do not lose credit for your earnings through the lack of a social security number. Get your number at the nearest field office of the Social Security Administration. Remember, one number only—for a lifetime. If you have had a social security card but have lost it, apply for a duplicate card. Your local field office or your post office can supply you with the application Form SS-5, used for either an original or duplicate account number. Fill it out in ink and mail it to the Social Security Administration. The post office has the address.
